

BRITISH PRESS IS AROUSED BY ATTACK ON FORMER KING

Charges of "Stone-Throwing" And Lack of Charity Are Made

FEELING IS AROUSED

Statement by Archbishop of York Considered Very Untimely

By David P. Senter
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
LONDON, Dec. 23.—(INS)—Charges of "stone-throwing," lack of charity, harshness, and especially seasonal inappropriateness were hurled by an aroused press today at the Archbishop of York for his reprimand to former King Edward.

Because of the attacks by high clericals on the ex-king, the Archbishop of Canterbury's appeal for a resurgence of religious feeling was deemed to have been badly damaged even before he sets it under way in a world radio broadcast this Sunday.

"Hardly had the Archbishop of Canterbury considerably shocked and startled millions by a broadcast that seemed unfair and unkind to a man who has left us in quiet dignity," says the Daily Mirror, "that the Archbishop of York intervenes with a diocesan message not so venomously pointed in moral illusions, but still critical and rather heavily explanatory of times, dates, and appropriate seasons when love begins and love can be resisted."

"What are we to do? What if the Archbishop won't keep quiet? What a awful thought!—if all the Bishops insist this Christmas on throwing stones and emitting retrospective judgments?" "We are sure many of them will refrain. We heartily hope most of them will disagree with the top two dignitaries. Even so, let them spare us an Episcopal broil. We have had enough of this. Peace, good will, and reconciliation!"

Lord Rothermere's other morning paper, The Daily Mail, said: "Widespread regret and surprise will be felt that the recent events through which the nation passed have been brought back to mind by the pronouncement of the Archbishop of York in his diocesan letter."

"The Archbishop of Canterbury's broadcast of two Sundays ago was adjudged by many not to have been well-advised, and that grievous chapter which was closed now has been conned over again and will be deplored."

"To insist on dwelling on yesterday and to reassess a crisis safely surmounted is unprofitable, while the harsh terms used by the Archbishop of York are doubly inappropriate at this season. There will be general resentment if charity does not allow this matter to sleep."

Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express comments: "At this time and season we would have liked to drop the subject of Edward's affairs. We believe the public would wish that, too."

"However, another Archbishop, York, has brought it up again."

"There are two Archbishops that the English state recognizes and pays for. Now they have both had their say about the former head of the state."

"So now possibly both will agree to let things rest. The Archbishop of Canterbury's call to prayer, faith, hope, and charity could not be better timed."

Only the Christmas Parliamentary recess keeps the controversy between church and ex-king from reaching the floor of the House of Commons again.

One M. P., however, Laborite Ernest Thurtle, who opposed Edward's abdication, commented bitterly: "The Archbishop of York's strictures on ex-King Edward are nauseating humbug," said Thurtle. "Now that Edward has gone, all the Archbishops are assailing him, and in so doing they are displaying a remarkable lack of decency and Christian charity."

CHASE TURKEYS

When members of Bristol Lodge, No. 970, B. P. O. E., chased turkeys last evening in the Elks home, each of the following were successful in making a catch: Messrs. John Kessler, George Phillips, Owen Evans, Maurice Updyke, Andrew Jackson, Joseph McGrath, Samuel Pearson, Chauncey Stoneback, Sr., Charles Dietrich, Harry Sheese, Leonard Blanche, Pierre McVaine, John Y. Turner, Maxwell J. Gordon.

PROGRAM AT EIGHT

The program planned for presentation by Wood street school pupils this evening in Bristol M. E. Church has been cancelled owing to illness among the children. There will be an impromptu program with exchange of gifts at eight o'clock, tonight, on this the occasion of the annual Christmas festival.

IN NEW HOME

Mr. and Mrs. William Griffiths are moving today from Garden street, to their newly-built residence on Taylor street.

Festival Conducted For St. James's Sabbath School

The Christmas festival of St. James's P. E. Sunday School was conducted last evening in St. James's parish house.

The program opened with carols, "Adeste Fidelis", "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear", "Hark! the Herald Angels Sing", "While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks by Night."

Mr. Presto, the magician, entertained the children with stunts of magic; Mrs. Mary Duhamel entertained with a Christmas story; and the primary grades sang "Away in a Manger."

Santa Claus arrived to distribute gifts to those having perfect attendance. Each Sunday School scholar received a box of candy.

The final number of the program was "O Little Town of Bethlehem," sung by the assemblage.

BELLS OF ST. MARY'S PLACED 70 YEARS AGO

Half Hour of X'mas Hymns Will Mark Anniversary On Christmas Eve

ARE WIDELY FAMED

BURLINGTON, N. J., Dec. 23.—"The Bells of St. Mary's" is a sweet song to all familiar with its strains the world over, but in this city "The Bells of St. Mary's" are a famous reality.

It was 70 years ago this Christmas eve that the famous bells of St. Mary's P. E. Church pealed forth their notes for the first time.

The widely-praised bells with their exceedingly sweet chime have maintained their reputation throughout seven decades.

Marking the 70th anniversary of the bells of St. Mary's on Thursday midnight, John H. Miller, master of chimes, and his assistant, Norman Burr, Jr., will play Christmas hymns for a period of a half hour.

The bells are eight in number. They are stationary and are played by having clappers pulled against them. The ringers operate from above the bells.

Procured in England without regard to cost the peal was given in memory of the Right Rev. G. W. Doane, second Bishop of New Jersey, and is believed to be surpassed by none in this country.

The peal was the gift of the Misses Margaret S. and Mary McVaine to the church. The former died before she heard the bells ring. The sum given for the bells was about $10,000, with a fund additional to pay the ringers forever.

The largest bell, weighing 2800 pounds, is inscribed with the names of the Misses McVaine and other suitable wording. Other bells are named "The Bishop's Bell," the "Rector's Bell," the "People's Bell," the "Thanksgiving Bell," the "Funeral Bell," the "Marriage Bell," and the "Patriot's Bell."

They were placed in the church tower in March, 1866, after being brought from England to Philadelphia earlier in the year.

The ship carrying the bells from Liverpool to Philadelphia encountered terrible weather. It was a full month at sea, and the water was at one time five feet deep on the deck, with 600 tons of water on the ship. Placed in the bottom of the hold, the bells had a narrow escape.

As soon as the bells were finished and first tested at the Mears Bell Foundry, at Whitechapel, London, the experts said a finer peal of bells had never left the foundry. "They have been so universally admired the last two or three months we are sorry to lose them," the bell makers wrote.

The Misses McVaine made provision for securing the bells as early as 1863, but the matter was delayed year after year owing to the high rate of exchange. Their agent in this matter was a Philadelphia attorney, James H. Castle.

Correspondence between Castle and the bell-makers and between church members and the English firm makes for interesting reading. Mears and Co. did not approve of the specifications as sent to them. Mears and Co. replied they could not guarantee a "sweet chime" if they followed instructions, and implied strongly they could turn out an excellent set of bells if they were allowed to make them as they saw fit. Eventually, this was agreed to.

Rev. Mr. Ward has the originals of these valuable letters in his care. They are only a portion of the extensive records of the church that have been carefully put away.

The rector says that it has cost very little for the bells and equipment. New ropes and mechanism to assist in having the bells rung are about the only things to be bought.

HULMEVILLE PUPILS ARE PROGRAM PARTICIPANTS

Christmas Numbers Presented In Church Auditorium Last Evening

AUXILIARY ELECTION

HULMEVILLE, Dec. 23.—Over 125 boys and girls of Hulmeville-Middle-town public school participated in the school Christmas entertainment given last evening in Neshaminy M. E. Sunday School building. The participants were from the eight grades of the school.

The auditorium was filled to capacity for the affair, and all students took their parts in splendid manner. Colorful costumes added to some of the presentations.

The program numbers: Song, "Silent Night," assemblage; prayer, the Rev. T. William Smith; "What Happened to Santa," an operetta by grades 1, 2, 3, and 4, under direction of the Misses Ann MacCorkle and Margaret Perry; "Safety First," play, grades 5 and 6, with Miss Lavinia Ellis in charge; playlet, "The Boy Who Didn't Behave," grades 5 and 6; play, "When Christ Was Born," grades 5, 6, 7, 8, with Miss Ellis and principal Lynn Schatzer directing.

There will be exchange of gifts tomorrow morning among the pupils at the school. Sessions will close tomorrow at one p. m., to reopen on the morning of January 4th.

Election of officers was in order at the December meeting of the Ladies Auxiliary in the William Penn Fire Company station, Monday evening. Miss Margaret Perry was named to succeed Miss Elizabeth Foster as president; Mrs. Edward Bilger was chosen vice-president; Mrs. Lynn Schatzer, secretary; Miss Helen Bilger, treasurer.

A Christmas party followed the meeting, and the members also feted Miss Elizabeth Foster, presenting her with a bound quilt, and a cake topped with a miniature bride and groom.

Games were in charge of Mrs. Charles Thorpe, Sr., and Mrs. Charles Gardner; refreshment committee included Mrs. John Worrall and Mrs. William Hill. Prizes for games were won by Mrs. Herbert Myers, Mrs. William Perry, and Miss Perry. There was also exchange of gifts, with Mrs. Charles Thorpe, Sr., impersonating Santa Claus. Refreshments of ice cream and cake were served.

Give X'mas Program At Bucks County Home

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 23.—With Mrs. William R. Mercer, Jr., presiding, and Mrs. Charles F. Freeman, chairwoman, about 12 County Seat women, representing the Doylestown V. I. A., on Saturday afternoon staged a Christmas party at the Bucks County Home.

Two reels of pictures were shown by Oscar O. Bean, in addition to a carol service led by Mrs. Walter Groman and Mrs. John S. Fretz, who assisted at the piano.

Rev. Charles F. Freeman served as Santa Claus and each guest at the home was presented with a gift.

Ice cream, cake, oranges and apples were served as refreshments.

CHECKS ARE READY

N. Y. A. students of the Bristol high school may receive their checks by calling at the home of Warren P. Snyder, 1202 Pond street, after three o'clock this afternoon, or anytime tomorrow.

WOOD STREET SCHOOL HAS A X'MAS PROGRAM

Songs, Playlets, Recitations Are Included In The Fine Numbers

ROOMS ARE DECORATED

Wood street school presented a Christmas entertainment on Tuesday at two o'clock. The entertainment opened with the singing of carols by the school: "Hark! the Herald Angels Sing," "Away in a Manger," "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear," and "Silent Night."

The play presented was entitled "The Lazy Elf" (La Fleur). It had a cast of 24, including boys and girls from the first to sixth grades. Throughout the play there were vocal selections by the group and four quartets. The time was Afternoon of the Day Before Christmas; scene, Santa's Workshop.

Characters were: Santa Claus, George Hussey; Jack-of-all-trades, an apprentice Elf, Samuel Conti; Tumbleheels and Cartwheel, Santa's messengers, Philip Orazi and Jack Stetson; carpenters, Angelo Antonelli, Wilbur Stetson, Roland Hems; painters, Helen Woods, Rachel Conti, Pearl Bell, Marie Sigafoos; electricians, Bert Nichols, George Irwin, Thomas DiLorenzo, Stanley Glazier; doll makers, Lorraine Hopkins, Ellen Jane Booz, Josephine Bommert, Rita DiLodati; dolls, Dorothy Anne Hunter, Myrtle Corning, Rose Orazi, Rosalie Conti.

The program closed with the singing of "The First Noel" and "O Little Town of Bethlehem" by a quartet. The quartet was composed of John Bowen, John Sharkey, John Lombardi, and John Stetson, all fourth grade boys. The play and musical selections were coached by Miss Ida Phipps, second grade teacher.

The entire building entered into the Yuletide spirit. Each room was decorated with winter scenes, fireplaces, Santa Clauses, and a beautifully decorated tree. In most cases the children decorated their rooms.

Puts Army On Alert

Havana, Dec. 23.—Colonel Fulgencio Batista, real ruler in this land, whose cabinet has quit and whose president faces speedy removal, today put the army on the alert to quell any attempt at a democratic coup during the impeachment trial of President Miguel Mariano Gomez. As the President worked up to the last minute on plans for his defense before a Senatorial court this afternoon, his few Congressional supporters, however, gathered with the army faction for their own safety, and there appeared little likelihood of trouble.

President Gomez, a skilled lawyer and a man of courage, as shown by his veto of the Batista-fostered sugar tax bill for army schools, closely studied every angle of his impeachment, and planned a bitter fight to the finish.

Secure in the support of the army, as well as the Congress that overrode Gomez's veto by a heavy majority, Colonel Batista was certain that Christmas Eve will see the end of Gomez's regime, with the armies resorting to quell the crowd.

Dr. Gomez, whose position as an attorney won for him the right to conduct his own defense, is expected to make a long appeal against the charge that he coerced Congress in an attempt to force defeat of the sugar tax.

Ex-Senator Fess Dies

Washington, Dec. 23.—Ex-Senator Simeon D. Fess, of Ohio, suffered a heart attack today and died before medical aid could reach him.

The former Senator had arisen as usual in the hotel where he made his home, and was preparing to do some Christmas shopping when he collapsed. He expired before a doctor could arrive.

For many years Simeon D. Fess played a prominent role in national affairs and in the Republican party. He first entered Congress in 1913 and in 1923 entered the Senate, where he served until his retirement in 1935.

He served as keynote and temporary chairman of the Republican National Convention in 1928, and in 1930 and 1931 was chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Senator Fess spoke in Bristol upon the dedication of the high school auditorium.

YULE HOLIDAYS MOST DANGEROUS FOR DRIVING

Warnings Issued to Motorists By Secretary of Revenue, Commonwealth of Pa.

WATCH OUT FOR SKIDS

HARRISBURG, Dec. 23.—The most hazardous driving period of the year is from now until New Year's Day, Secretary of Revenue John B. Kelly today warned motorists.

The wet or icy streets of early winter do not provide the traction with which motorists become familiar during the summer. Many an unwary driver rolling along at a speed to which he had become accustomed on dry roads is discovering too late that applying his brakes results in a skid instead of a stop.

A dangerous skid almost always results if the driver attempts to drive fast or stop suddenly on a wet or icy pavement. When the highways are slippery the driver should reduce his speed ten to fifteen miles per hour below his usual rate. He should approach intersections or other dangerous points slowly so that sudden stops from high speed may not be necessary.

The driver should also avoid following other vehicles too closely to forestall the possibility of rear end collisions. Once the car has gone into a skid, the driver should let the clutch remain engaged, apply the brakes lightly and work the steering wheel to bring the car into line.

Skidding is aggravated by mechanical imperfections in the car. Improperly adjusted brakes are extremely hazardous on wet or icy streets. "Bald-headed" tires, especially in the rear, are the cause of much skidding and they should be retreaded or repaired. Tire chains also reduce the possibility of skidding under certain circumstances.

In fog or mist, even in daylight the headlights with depressed beams should be used so that other drivers may be able to see the approaching car.

Dangerous sleet incrustations on the windshield may be removed with a safety razor blade mounted in a special handle. Glycerine applied to the windshield prevents the ice from sticking. When the windshield wiper clears only a small opening, the driver should lean well forward especially at turns or other dangerous locations to insure safety.

In rain, the most dangerous period for skidding is at the beginning or immediately after a light shower when the mud on the pavement is neither dry nor washed off but instead becomes a film of slippery paste. Under such conditions at night the driver should occasionally wipe off the mud thrown against his headlamp lenses by passing cars in order to get full illumination.

Near Death From Shooting

Philadelphia, Dec. 23.—Shot through the chest, back and arm, pretty 19-year-old Mrs. Margaret Kerns today lay near death while her estranged husband, Jerome, a 24-year-old WPA worker, was held in jail as her assailant. The shooting climaxed a quarrel which followed Kerns' effort to arrange a reconciliation, police said. Kerns admitted, police said, that he also fired two shots at his mother-in-law, but both bullets went wild.

Philadelphia, Dec. 23.—Mrs. Ellen Jordan, 66, died in the Roxborough hospital here, today, a few hours after the automobile in which she was riding, sideswiped another at Ridge avenue and Gorgas street.

Mrs. Jordan, who died of a fractured skull, was riding from a visit to a son at Plymouth Meeting, with her grandson, with whom she resides.

Americanization Class Holds Sale of Hand-made Articles To Pay Expenses

SPONSORED BY LEGION

Announce That 35 People Have Been Naturalized Through Efforts

It is stated by the Americanization class which is under leadership of Miss Dora Thompson, through its sponsor, the Robert W. Bracken Post of the American Legion, that thus far approximately 35 people have been aided to become American citizens.

It is furthermore announced by this organization that each week an average of five papers are forwarded for immigrants to the immigration and naturalization offices of the United States.

The class is assisting aliens in citizenship training, the English language, reading and writing. The classes are held on Tuesday and Friday evenings between the hours of 6:30 and 8:30 o'clock.

In order to acquaint themselves better with the procedure of the government of the United States, students are preparing to send two representatives of the class to Washington to witness the inauguration of President Roosevelt.

To raise funds to cover the expense of this trip, they held a sale of hand-made articles last evening, some of which were: lace, hand-crocheted handkerchiefs, tatted articles, and many other novelties.

Wood street school building will receive a flag in the near future from the class.

Hilarity Reigns As The Rotarians Receive Gifts

Hilarity reigned at the Christmas luncheon party of the Bristol Rotary Club in the Elks home, yesterday afternoon.

Gifts which were presented to the Rotarians were comically aimed at the professions, businesses and hobbies of the members, and much amusement was caused as each package was opened and the gifts brought to view.

Christmas carols were led by Ernest Gamble, and the men sang the new Christmas song, "That's What I Want For Christmas."

SETTLING A DEBT

The United States government has just settled an 81-year-old debt owed to the onetime Indian nation of the Blackfeet. In 1855, the federal government made a deal with the Blackfeet for purchase of 40,000,000 acres—two-thirds of the area of the present State of Montana—at $1.25 an acre. The years went by with disputes over the contract making leisurely progress through the courts. Finally Congress amended the contract to provide for payment of seventeen cents an acre for 17,000,000 of the acres involved and nothing for the rest. That brought down the original debt from $50,000,000 to $1,890,000, a very neat bit of reduction.

But the government did not stop there. During the 81 years' delay in settling that debt, the government had paid various sums to the Blackfeet, who have dwindled in number so that only 730 of the Montana Gros Ventres, a subdivision of the tribe, are left as parties to the contract. Deduction of federal funds, previously paid to members of the tribe for various purposes, cut the principal of the revised debt from $1,890,000 to $146,000.

So the 730 Gros Ventres will receive $200 each in full settlement of the United States government's promise to pay $50,000,000—a debt in default for eight decades.

Those European nations have an awful nerve, defaulting and then expecting us to cut their war debts!

12 MILLION DOLLAR WARNING

December again brings to Uncle Sam's desk his semi-annual batch of letters from European powers making excuses for not paying their installments of war debts. They are all busy getting ready for the next war.

War costs a lot. The other war cost the United States more than anybody has been able to estimate. But the figures on the debt owed the United States by the nations that started the mess are definite. The total is $12,556,000,000. And that is only half the amount the debtors could have owed under the original agreement. The debt has been scaled down, which doesn't matter much since they don't pay it anyway.

But the people of this country are getting something out of their investment that may prove more valuable than anything else they could have bought with the money. They have those debts as a perpetual warning not to get into any future European squabbles.

THE YULETIDE BOOM

Reports of nation-wide depletion of merchants' stocks in many lines, ten days before Christmas, are all the more remarkable when it is added that not since 1929 have retailers stocked so heavily for the Yuletide trade.

Something is happening in this country, and it bodes no good for what poses as the depression.

We don't know but what a Roosevelt is smart in marrying a du Pont. There's nothing like having an economic royalist to fall back on if the abundant life begins to sag.

CHAPTER XXV

So it was a relief all around when they at last bundled a badly frightened but stubbornly nonchalant Christie off to the hospital one quiet, starlit June night.

More of a relief when she opened dull, troubled eyes on a brand new day and smiled wearily when a strange nurse said:

"Now! Are you all ready for the big news, Mrs. Latham? It's a boy!"

Donald was there, too, looking ill and white, but foolishly proud of the little red mite they brought to her.

"He's a perfect child, darling! Look at him! Best looking kid I ever saw. Jennings said the same thing. Look, Christie, isn't he a wonder? And he's going to have your eyes!"

She looked. Her eyes closed tightly and a tear or two squeezed through. She was so disappointed. She had expected—well—something a little different. Not a beautiful, big baby like the one her neighbor, Mrs. Wood, wheeled out in his buggy every day, of course—she knew that new babies weren't supposed to be very beautiful. But nobody had warned her that her baby might look like THIS!

So she wept secretly. Wild horses wouldn't have dragged the truth from her. Not for worlds would she let Donald know that she was afraid there was something terribly wrong with his son.

Afterwards, when Donald teased her about it, she denied it stoutly. It was the one time her sense of humor failed her. She was never able to see anything funny in the fact that the baby she had yearned and dreamed about was a cruel disappointment until well into his second week.

He was such a beautiful baby now. So fat and good and healthy. So everything that a baby should be. How could she, even just at first, have found him ugly.

She was, Dr. Jennings said, a natural mother. Instinctively she knew how to meet every situation. When Ina French, the girl she liked best of the graduate students, came to call and said, "But Mrs. Latham, doesn't he scare you to death? I mean, aren't you afraid to dress him and give him his bath and everything? Aren't you afraid you'll break him?" she smiled placidly.

"Of course not! He looks fragile, but I know he's really hard as nails. I mean, their bones are so soft, there's really nothing to break!"

Janet Wood, her neighbor, called with her four months' old daughter, prepared for an afternoon of swapping hospital horrors, but Christie would have none of it.

"People make too much fuss about having babies. I don't think it's anything at all. And I don't think that taking care of one is any trouble at all, either. Of course, if a baby is sick, or spoiled, that's different. But little Donny is absolutely healthy, and of course I don't intend to spoil him!"

Her unnatural attitude made her very unpopular with the Woods, and the one or two other young mothers in her community.

It was true that she'd never felt better in her life, and that young Donald was little bother. He ate, slept and woke to eat and sleep again. With Big Donald rushing home from the laboratory evenings, to help her get dinner and wash the dishes, life was never easier.

All she lacked was a proper audience. There were so few to whom she could show the wonders of her baby's wide blue eyes, his dimples and his creases, his silken fuzz of pale gold hair.

"Have you written your mother?" she asked Donald one evening as they stood side by side, admiring the world's best baby, as Donald called him, in his crib.

"No. And she hasn't written me, either."

"I know. But Donald, she doesn't know! Think of it. She's a grandmother, and she doesn't know it!"

"I never knew her to express any desire to be a grandmother. In fact, honey, I'm compelled to admit she dislikes the idea. Besides she's got two grandchildren already. Editha, you know—"

"Oh, the idea! That doesn't count. The idea of being a father didn't thrill you very much either, and now look at you! Donald, she's your mother, and you know she loves you in spite of everything. She'd love your baby. Anyway, how could anybody help loving this baby? Don't you want to write her, and send her that picture we took Sunday?"

"No, I don't believe I do. She must know about it. Someone would have told her. Pasadena isn't the South Pole, you know. Editha always knows everything. They know all right!"

But he wasn't very emphatic about it.

She thought he wished he could bring himself to do it. And so on the impulse of the moment she sat down and scribbled a breezy, naive little letter to the mother-in-law who might have liked her. The letter didn't quite satisfy her, but it would be hard to write a better one. Anyway, what difference did the letter make? It would be the picture, and the baby that would count.

Twice she almost told Donald what she had done. They she decided not to tell him until the answer came.

It came Saturday morning, just after she had settled young Donny for his after-bath nap, and was going to start on the washing.

A square, blue-gray envelope with a Pasadena postmark.

Swiftly she tore it open, read the few lines on the page, glanced at the folded slip of paper within it—Eve Latham's check for $10.

Then, with mounting color, and incredulous eyes, she read it again.

"My dear Christine:

"It was so sweet of you to write. I appreciate your thinking of me, especially as my son so evidently did not. I only wish that I could share your enthusiasm. I am happy for you, but you must forgive me when I am forced to say that I can not understand how you could see your way clear to burden my already overburdened son with still another financial responsibility at this time."

"I regret that I cannot do more, but perhaps this small check will suffice to buy some little thing you need for yourself or the child."

"Very sincerely,

"EVE LATHAM."

Donald found her on her knees by the baby's bassinet, still crying, when he came home for lunch, a little early.

Christie crying! Why she hadn't had one of those crying spells since the baby was born.

He dropped the packages of French bread and cheese he had been bringing home for a surprise. "Darling, what's the matter? What happened? Tell me!"

"Nothing—really nothing. I was just—crying. Really, there was nothing—nothing at all."

As he lifted her to her feet, a little shower of blue gray scraps drifted to the floor.

"You got a letter from mother. Christie—you WROTE to her."

She nodded, miserably, averting her face. "Yes, I did. I was a fool."

"What did she say?"

"Oh, nothing. Not a word about the picture. I felt so bad—"

From the blue scraps he picked up two of a different shade. Unfolded them.

It was the check that she had torn with the letter.

He whistled, and she turned, tried to snatch the scraps from him. "Oh, Donald, I DIDN'T want you to see it!"

But he was already fitting the pieces together. She watched, fascinated, as though she were watching him work on a jig-saw puzzle. Watched while he read what she had already read.

"Well, that's that," he said, sweeping the scraps into the wastebasket. Then he took her in his arms, and rocked her as he might have rocked the baby. "Poor little girl. Poor little trusting Christie."

A strangled sob came from the direction of his shoulder.

"But if she should be right. If—if I shouldn't have had a baby—now, while we haven't so much money, and you're busy. If I'm really a hindrance to you—"

"Of course you're a hindrance. So's the baby. Well, I might keep you, you're a pretty good cook, but the baby will have to go. Shall we send him to the nearest orphan asylum, or just abandon him on a doorstep?"

"Oh, Donald," she wailed, "you're so crazy! And you're making me laugh, when I'm still mad, and scared. Oh, Donald, darling, are you SURE that you're glad? Sure you won't ever feel that she's right?"

"Nothing would be right, without you and little Donny. Don't you know that, Christie?"

She looked at him, saw the love and the truth in his eyes.

"Then nothing matters. Donald, in my whole, whole life, I never loved you quite so much, and I'll never worry, and try to keep anything from you again!"

Christie thought that she'd never try to keep anything from Donald again.

Their life was so perfect now, so smooth and happy. They didn't need his mother, or Nettie Cooper, or any of the old gay crowd that failed them. They had each other, and the baby. They had their small, shining house, with its treasures of books and etchings and hand-wrought copper and brass and the colorful cushions and curtains and braided rugs that her loving hands had made.

They had the little square of old-fashioned garden, gay with marigolds and pinks and petunias and pansies. They had forget-me-nots in the shade under the oak trees, and jasmine and honeysuckle growing up over the back porch.

They had the view of the bay, and the city below them, and the hills above them. They had a few good friends, and some pleasant neighbors.

The baby slept in his basket, woke to laugh and play with his toes, and to drink obediently the orange juice, the tomato juice, the water that Jennings prescribed, and other babies, he said, often spat out.

If Donald left early and came home late, Christie was used to it now. She was no longer jealous of the experiments. She knew that she and little Donny really came first. And if Donald was thinner, and there were new lines around his eyes, she didn't notice. It didn't occur to her that a doctor, or a doctor's family, could ever be ill. She thought that they bore charmed lives. She knew that the baby was thriving, and that she and Donald loved each other and were content, and that was all that seemed to matter.

The bills troubled her a little. She got them all paid eventually, but it was always a struggle to decide which to pay first, and how to juggle the scanty funds.

She was checking them over this afternoon, for it was almost the first of September, and there was the interest on the house, a garage bill, and a druggist's bill, besides the usual first of the month things to think about.

She was just in the middle of a column of figures when the door-bell rang.

"Oh, darn!" she said mildly, hoping it wasn't a caller, for it was 3 o'clock already, and she'd planned to make lemon-cream pie, and get it into the oven before Donny's 4 o'clock feeding.

Just in case it was, she ran to take a peek at him in his buggy on the back porch, before she opened the door.

ODORLESS ONIONS

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah—(INS)—Science has at hand a probable solution to the personal problem created by the presence of allyl sulphide in onions. Allyl sulphide is the element that causes onions to have an odor. Prof. Walter P. Cottam of University of Utah botany department explained. It could be entirely removed by selective breeding over a period of about five years and a strain developed which would have no odor. The only drawback to such development,

ELIMINATED BY BORNICHE

Joseph Borniche eliminated Nick Gilara from the Bristol Pool Tournament last night, defeating the latter, 125-115, in a hotly-fought contest. A high run of 21 pulled the game out of fire for Borniche. Referee was Charles Librea, and the scorer John Spadacino.

RE-NAME E. BRITTON PREST OF GUN CLUB

EDGELEY, Dec. 23—The Edgely Rod & Gun Club held its December meeting in Dick's Hall, Monday evening, with president Elwood Britton presiding. The club had election of officers, with Elwood Britton being re-elected president; vice-president, Harry Pitman; treasurer, Samuel Hellings; and secretary, John Wolvin. The club appointed a committee to secure estimates on lumber for a building. The game committee reported having put out 60 rabbits, and the trap committee reported a successful year.

There were seven bands returned from the 18 pheasants let out from the state, and they also received a band that was let out by another club. Peter Biehl received the prize for bands returned.

The club has accepted an invitation to hold its monthly meetings in the fire house, the next one being in January.

Thank you, Auntie Maisie, for that lovely
ANTIMACASSAR!

And thank you for the purple crocheted bedroom slippers with pompoms on the toes. Thank the girls for the hand-painted china hair-receiver—and little Benny for the Indian's head on leather. Father thanks you for the embroidered sleeve suspenders too!

It was a lovely box. There was nothing in it we could ever use or want or hope to see again. It was a lovely box—we're awfully glad we won't be getting it this year!

Advertising, more than any other factor, is responsible for the welcome change in Aunt Maisie's gift boxes! The advertisements know what people are going to want, ahead of time—and they tell Aunt Maisie. The result is, gifts you're glad to get! Gifts that cost less in time, money and effort than those the dear old relatives used to send.

Aunt Maisie calls her reading of the advertisements in this newspaper "keeping up to date." You probably call yours "scientific shopping." Whether you're shopping for yourself, your family or for Christmas, they tell you accurately not only WHAT—but WHERE and HOW MUCH and WHY and, if you read them carefully, even WHICH. Let them help you make your budget as well as your gift list truly grateful.

NEVER TOO LATE TO FIGURE OUT PROGRAM FOR LABOR SAVING

It is never too soon, but it's often too late, to figure out a program of labor-saving helps.

Particularly is this true at the busy holiday season, when we certainly need a Save the Health program.

The modern homemaker may have more demands on her time than did her Grandmother, but she has unlimited first-aids available, if she will but draw upon them.

The refrigerator can be stored with many a hidden treat which will solve meal problems during the orgy of shopping. Mix a roll of ice-box cookies, roll in waxed paper, cover with a towel, and you have a treat for bridge or party guests.

Vary the procession of roasts and fowl by boiling a smoked beef tongue. Put part of the tongue in vinegar and spices for variety. Warm the vinegar and, if strong, dilute with water, before pouring it over the tongue. You will find the family raiding the tongue for late-at-night sandwiches.

A recipe for horseradish sauce, to snap up the tongue, appears today. Also worthy of notice is a cheese spread, which is equally good for crackers or sandwiches. This mixture actually is better after it stands a day or two in the refrigerator. It makes those hearty sandwiches the men reach for.

Simple Christmas table decorations should harmonize with your health program. Also, they are the most effective.

There is nothing lovelier than tall red candles, clustered around one of the miniature growing pine or spruce trees. Trim the flower pot in green paper and tie it with a dashing red ribbon.

If you are fortunate enough to live in pine-growing country, you can provide a lovely centerpiece of greens. The children will enjoy the fun of stringing cranberries and popcorn for decoration. A rope of berries and corn, strung alternately, is colorful to twist around the tree.

Such a centerpiece also provides an opportunity for fun, if you are having a family party. Provide some amusing little gifts, or ask each guest to contribute some ten-cent surprises. Run red ribbons from each place and attach them to the gifts under the tree.

Did you ever hear of a "Ladder" Christmas tree? In one country home, far from the evergreen market, an ordinary stepladder has provided the gift tree for many a year. The ladder is disguised with green paper frills and gifts are tied from each step. Quite often a step holds a note which guides some member to a hidden gift in a distant room, when that item was too bulky to make the climb up the ladder.

Now for a Christmas gift hint. How many times the woman whose gift allowance is limited puzzles over some suitable offering for her business girl friend, the one who seems to "have everything." If you want to earn her heartfelt gratitude, wrap up a jar of jelly, marmalade or canned fruit, or send her a box of home-made cookies in holiday wrappings.

sired. Call O'Boyle today, and tell him how many quarts you wish, and when it is to be delivered.

H. R. McGee, wholesale confectioner, at Lafayette and Wood streets, will show you something in the line of sweets that will fit your pocketbook. Whether it be hard candies, the candy toys or canes, or chocolate covered nuts, fruits, or creams, Mr. McGee can supply such.

The suggestion for the little girl for Christmas is a Shirley Temple dress, purchased from Corn's store, Mill street. Whether it be a sleeveless model in a pastel shade for holiday parties, or a more practical garment of heavy material for school or other occasions, Corn's have it. This line of dress is very popular, and comes in flowered, checked, or plain colors.

The Amoco Service Station, located on the highway, at Market street, mentions a Winter-front for the automobile radiator as the ideal gift for the driver of a car. The prices range, as do the colors. Make your motorist friend happy.

DEFENDS HAIG

SINGAPORE—(INS)—A spirited defense of Earl Haig and an attack on "somebody's" book for "besmirching Haig's memory, when he was no longer there to reply," were made in a speech at an Ex-Service Association's dinner here by Major General W. G. S. Dobbie.

Give Xmas Presents From Pantry Shelf Is Good Suggestion

By Rhadenia A. Armstrong
(Home Economics Representative)

What shall I give for Christmas? This need not be a difficult problem for the woman who has a heavily laden pantry shelf. There is nothing which makes a nicer gift or one which is more appreciated than canned foods, jellies, or preserves.

Canned vegetables and fruits, preserves, jellies, and preserves in attractive containers and tied up with a bit of red ribbon and sprig of pine or holly cannot help but receive an exclamation of joy from those who are not fortunate enough to have a supply of home canned products to choose daily.

An ideal way of remembering a sick friend or invalid during the Christmas season is to give several small containers of your favorite jellies wrapped in silver paper or you may prefer to send several bottles of fruit juices, packed in a gay container.

Dried fruits or vegetables such as apples or corn are always received with enthusiasm.

Another suggestion which may help to solve the problem for many busy homemakers, is to make extra Christmas cakes or puddings when the family supply is being made. Christmas cookies cut in fancy shapes can be arranged in many different ways. They make an excellent gift for those friends who have "just everything." The cookies may be packed in inexpensive Christmas boxes or colored cellophane and tied with ribbon.

Those who wish to spend a bit more money for gifts may prefer to place some Christmas food in an oven-glass or pottery container or on a basket or tray which may still be used long after the pudding or cake has disappeared.

"Say it with home-produced gifts" this Christmas and see how happy you can make others at such a small outlay of money.

Make Personal Gifts From Scrap Bag Bits

"Merry Christmas!" It's in the air. Shop windows and magazine pages abound in gift suggestions. But gifts made at home can be just as attractive, individual, and much more personal.

The simplest materials are often all that are required but before making anything think whether or not the gift will be useful to the person who receives it. Is it something you would like to have, if you were in your friend's position?

Too often a gift is another dirt catcher, white elephant, something to take up storage space, or a problem to use. Towels, aprons, hot dish holders or breakfast cloths to be used in the kitchen are welcomed by the busy homemaker. The scrap bag will yield many pieces which can go into the making of these or patch work pillows, appliques for covers, and mats.

Wrapping the gift attractively gives pleasure to giver and receiver. Even what seems like a very ordinary gift, if neatly wrapped in gay colored paper and a sprig of green, a pine cone or bit of holly tucked in, becomes a very impressive gift. There is pleasure and satisfaction in doing this little extra wrapping. Cellophane wrappings are colorful and festive looking and especially appropriate for foods. Boxes saved through the year may be covered with fancy papers or even brown paper decorated with a holiday scene cut from some magazine or a Christmas card received last year.

RECIPES

Miniature Cabbages

At this time of year, members of the cabbage family are both low in price and high in quality. Never have I seen Brussels Sprouts so reasonably priced.

These dainty, bright green, miniature cabbages are as delicious as they look—that is, if properly cooked. Too often the flavor is spoiled by overcooking. Seven or eight minutes should be the limit on cooking time, if you want the sprouts to retain their color and flavor.

Soak the sprouts in cold, salted water for a few minutes after they are cleaned. Remove wilted, outside leaves. You may drop the sprouts into a large pot of boiling water, and cook them uncovered, or they may be steamed in a small quantity of water in a tightly covered pan.

Dress your sprouts with melted or browned butter, which may be touched up with lemon juice for variety. Cream instead of butter may be used, or the sprouts are delicious served with a cheese or a Hollandaise sauce. Sliced roasted chestnuts, or Brazil nuts, browned in butter, may be used with a cream sauce, or with melted butter. A Scotch woman, known for her excellent cooking, first introduced me to the combination of Brussels Sprouts and chestnuts. This is one of her regular holiday treats. She prepares the chestnuts a day in advance to save precious time, and combines the whole cooked chestnut with the boiled sprouts, seasoning and covering generously with melted butter.

Use about one-half pound chestnuts to one quart of sprouts. Cut a cross in the chestnut and shake with butter in a frying pan over the fire for five minutes. Then you can quickly remove shells and skin. A variation of this dish is to heat the sprouts in two cups of well seasoned white sauce, add sliced or whole chestnuts, reheat and serve.

Special Sauce

Often we are inclined to overlook the possibilities of a truly distinctive sauce in transforming an every day dish into a party affair.

This Special Sauce is recommended for such vegetables as cauliflower, broccoli, Brussels sprouts or asparagus, and it also is excellent with the boiled fish, of which our English cousins are so fond. It is simple too, and quickly made.

Two egg yolks, three-fourths cup sour cream and one teaspoon tarragon vinegar. Beat the egg yolks, add cream and vinegar and cook sauce over hot, not boiling, water until thick. Remove from the fire and pour over the fish or boiled vegetables, which of course are already seasoned. Sweet cream may be used if more vinegar is added.

Baked Apple Custard

This Southern style baked apple dessert is particularly good right now, with excellent winter apples in the market.

Six choice apples, one-half cup sugar, one pint milk, three eggs, two-thirds cup sugar, one teaspoon vanilla, pinch of salt. (The quantity of sugar can be decreased.)

Pare and core the apples, arrange in a baking dish and sprinkle the one-half cup of granulated sugar in and around them. Bake in a moderate oven until tender, but not so soft that they will lose shape.

Remove from oven and pour in and around them the milk mixture, made thus: Beat eggs well, add the two-thirds cup sugar, beat again, add milk, salt, vanilla. Bake very slowly until a knife blade comes out clean after inserting it in custard.

This dessert is splendid served warm or cold and it is good for the children. A spoon of jelly may be used in each apple.

BUS FOR TEL AVIV

JERUSALEM — (INS) — The first double-decker omnibus ever to ply in Palestine will soon be put into service on the streets of Tel Aviv, the Jewish city adjoining Jaffa. The bus is a British model which was on show at the Levant Fair last spring. Because this type of vehicle is unusual to the country, and may damage overhead telephone and electric wires, the Government has enacted a special law permitting a trial service.

STEEL SHIRTS

BELGRADE—(INS)—A bankrupt in Zagreb explained that he lost all his money making steel shirts. They were light and supple and completely proof against revolver bullets. But no one would buy them. Stjepan Malinger has spent much of his spare time inventing things which no one seems to want. But in his steel shirt Stjepan thought he had a "winner." It would fill a long-felt want, he considered, for policemen and important politicians. But although trials proved the shirts to be proof against revolver shots and not uncomfortable to wear there was no demand.

RED AND GREEN ARE GREETED BY RIVALS ON CHRISTMAS TABLES

Dear Friends in Bristol:

Determined to track down all the newest inspirations for holiday tables, I made a special trip along the famous Fifth Avenue in New York City to glean first-hand news for today's chat with you.

The old red-and-green combination, better look to its laurels this year, for the decorators simply refuse to stick to the traditional colors for festive Christmas tables.

It's going to be a "white" Christmas again, for hundreds and perhaps thousands of party tables. After all, what could be lovelier than a table spread with immaculate white linen, with tall white candles looking down on gleaming silver, and a white Christmas tree as a centerpiece, tinkling with tiny silver bells.

White and silver, that's the union of the hour, and somehow it adds far more dignity to the feast than a riot of color.

Of course, a suggestion of red may be introduced on the tree, in the nut cups, or red frills may form the candle base. Cellophane comes into its own here, providing glossy charm in white or in colors. A red cellophane base sets off white candles to perfection.

Blue and silver, too, are winning more admirers each year, and blue touches may be used effectively on your white table. They are particularly charming if you happen to have blue glasses and blue glass candle holders.

The silvery-white trees, completely made of paper and "planted" in red imitation flower pots, offer their branches for tiny gifts, or amusing favors. Or they may be hung with glittering icicles, to simulate a wintry scene. The trees come in several sizes, so that you can fit the centerpiece to the party.

One clever decorator, who revels in using the ingenious paper novelties for entertaining, suggests placing a Christmas tree at each end of the table, with a connecting link of tiny candles down the center of the table. Or the little candles may be set at each individual cover.

Speaking of candles, they have graduated into colorful new personalities and shapes, and appear as Christmas trees, snow men, Santa Clauses and even tiny red boots. The bright boots are a 1936 inspiration. The band of white tallow at the top forms a perfect cuff, and the shiny little boot stands on the table sturdily, as though it were made for some dwarf. The red green candle trees, with their red berries, have a wide size and price range, and offer fresh and amusing note for the holiday table. All these candles are hand-dipped, of course.

Snappers are more decorative, too, and are gay outside, as well as within. The snappers for white tables have lacy frills, caught with narrow bands of red cellophane.

However, even a motto can change its shape, and the most modern touch is puffy white snowballs for the party table. Each round snowball has its sprig of holly, which pulls out to reveal the favors inside. These could easily be combined with place cards.

Nut cups have gone practical, and bear a tiny blank card for the guest's name. A clever red nut cup, with its place card, has a Santa Claus jointed cover, which serves as a know, as well as keeping the next fellow's ashes out of your treat.

Remember the Jack Horner pie? Here it is in the form of a realistic chimney, fashioned of heavy cardboard, with old Mr. Santa Claus himself ready to clamber in. Red ribbons from each place will guide the excited guests to the hidden treasures which fill the chimney. This is not too large for a table centerpiece, and it has the added recommendation of serving again and again as a gift "pie."

Children would thrill over the gift-chimney, and also they would love the colorful horns of plenty, which are still another suggestion on the holiday table. The horns, in harvest colors, were a great success on Thanksgiving festive boards, and they are back in red and gold and green and gold, ready to pour forth Christmas bounty. They are planned for use in pairs, one at each end of the table. Tall candles should harmonize with the predominating color.

By the way, those round, fluffy mottoes aren't the only snowballs available for your party. Christmas snowballs are taking form as nut cups, for novel centerpieces and for candle bases. Most of them wear a touch of red or blue.

Santa, of course, is ready to serve you in many guises. Fill him with nuts or candies, stand him at each place, if he is a candle, or use him beside the chimney or tree.

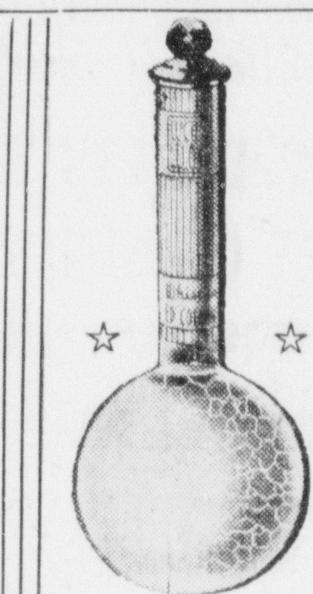

If your table scheme doesn't fit any of these ideas, you can still be different with a red, white and blue symphony, which would work out equally well on Christmas or on New Years. Paper plates now boast bright red rims, there are matching caps, and both may be placed on vivid blue paper doilies. Candles are Miss Liberty, in miniature. This is for the informal party, or supper snack. Your favors are hidden in large red, white and blue drums reminiscent of July Fourth.

All in all, it looks like a Bright Christmas, particularly for the clever hostess who enjoys adopting modern ideas for her holiday entertaining. Many a hostess chooses the holiday season to repay social debts, and these new table decorations are doubly practical since most of them will fit several occasions.

Here's to a merry holiday time for you all!

Merry Christmas

What an easy thing to say:

"Merry Christmas"

Its extended usage sometimes makes us forget the true meaning of the phrase. This year we have more reason than ever to give this old expression a heart-felt flavor.

Your patronage and friendship, which grow more precious with the passing of time, have brought us marked business success, and added personal regards.

SO IT IS WITH FERVOR AND APPRECIATION THAT WE WISH YOU
ALL A "MERRY CHRISTMAS"
